THE STORM .- Last night there was a violent easterly gale accompanied by rain, hail and snow. The streets were almost deserted, and the faw persons whose business required them to be out, made their way with difficulty against the wind. The tide rose very high, and tears were entertained of another freshet. During the night the wind changed to the northwest and dried up the mud. To day the weather has been bright and pleasant. So far as heard from no damage has been done along the lines of railroad leading to this city, although all of the streams are reported as very high, and fears are entertained of slides and washes at various poicts. Some apprehensions are felt for the canal, reports from the upper country represeating the water as very high and still rising. Rock Creek was over its banks last night and merchants to Georgetown were arranging for removing their goods.

The Winchester stage was unable to cross the water, and no conection was made with the W. & O. R. R

> THE NEW STEAMER .- Quite a crowd assembled on Prince street whart this morning to see the new steamer, W. W. Corcerup, on her first tripe to Mount Vernov. The boat is very handsomely fitted up and presented a very peat appearance to day with flars all figing. She sus quite high out of the water and is about the size of the ill-tated steamer Wawaset, which formerly plied on the Potomac. There was naite a good passenger list this morning. The upper deck of the boat is open and well arrang. ed for summer expursion parties.

Mr. Blaine's Speech.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 .- The Secate cham. ber to day was a thea re with one of the largest audiences ever assembled there. The floor was crowded from the President's obsic to the walls. and not only the galleries, but the vestibules into which they open, were filled by people apxious to see Mr. Blaine wave the bloody shirt and hear him rear, when he did it. Precisely at one o'clock the curtain rose, and the play commenced by Mr. Hamlin moving to take up his colleague's resolution. The resolu tion was then read. It differed somewhat from the original resolution, in that it provided for an investigation into frauds and intimidation in any of the States at the last election. Mr. Blaine then rose, amidst breathless silence, and read from a note book a carefully prepared at this point they cluded the vigilence of the speech of a half hour's duration, the purpose of which he said was to have recorded the frauds and outrages perpetrated at the South at the knowledged that all the information upon which he based his indictment of the whole southern people was derived from the newspapers, and as most people are aware of the reliability of articles written to radical newspapers by defeated candidates and their friends, the credibility of such information was made apparent by the smiles with which this assertion was received. He said that by the Constitution and laws, as they exist, the cvits of which he complained could not be corrected, but that the American people had spent millions of treasure, and sacrificed thousands of fives in making the citizens of the country free and equal, and that they did not intend that this treasure should be but under the name of election a war was carried on by the white against the colored people. He said that the question was reduced now as Board announced that by common consent it to whether the men who fought to preserve was agreed that no quorum should attend Wed- the Union or those who fought to destroy it loyal North could answer that question-that now, by preventing the pegroes from voting. the ex Confederate was twice as influential in the affairs of the government as the ex-Union seldier, but that it could not be so much longer; that now by fraud and gross outrage the dem ceratic party has gotten control of the next House of Representatives, but that the American people, who had stood almost everything, were now getting tired, and he warned the gentlemen from the South that the extra straw that broke the camel's back might soon be added. His whole argument was founded upon the groundless assumption that because the radical caodidates were not elected in districts in which the negroes have a majority of the voters, the atter must necessarily have been cheated or utimidated. He said that there was not a single case in the whole North where a voter was cheated or intimidated, and that he did not belive General Butler had said there was,

His speech was delivered with calmness and deliberation, and was received with applause. As soon as he had taken his seat, Mr. Thurman moved an amendment that the proposed investigation extend to the collection of assessmeats upon efficient of the solution of accepting upon his amendment, said Mr. Blaize could not produce a single lestance to prove his case, the place of single lestance to prove his case, and the produce the following are not destroyed or glands decayed. Its effects are beautifully shown on brashy, weak or sickly heir, to which a few applications will produce the gloss and freshness of youth. Harmless and and ther his speech locked to him as a string upon which to bang political speeches, calculated to produce a solid North against which the percicious legislation of his party, and the Freedmen's Bureau had made a solid South; that property, intelligence and education would govern in the South as they did elsewhere. He said that if he did not others would think that Mr. Blaine's speech was intended, by the replies it would produce, to stave off legislation upon the important matters of finance and currency and commerce that demand the attention of the Source.

Mr. Thurman being applauded during his re-marks the President said that if the applause was repeated the malleries should be cleared, and Mr. Elmunds showed his animosity by moving that those applauding be arrested.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Thurman's speech Mr. Lamar arose and commenced a speech that was in progress when this report closed.

During it be said he regretted that Mr. Blaine with his opportunities, abilities and natural desire to improve the people he had been so instrumental in liberating should have so narrowed his efforts as to include only the po litical preferment of a mere political party, and that if his efforts succeeded a flood would be created that would wash away the foundations upon which Maine and the other New England States now hold such an unequally preponderating influence in the affairs of the government. He said also, that if all Mr. Blaine said be true, the South was still a weak and impotent mi-

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., Dec 11 -The two detectives, whose presence gave rise to the suspicion that the remains of the late A. T. Stowart were concealed somewhere in this vicinity, have disappeared.

About two weeks ago a small craft appeared one night in the Kappahannock liver a few miles below this city. Her movements were so odd that she attracted the attention of two negroes who were coon hunting on the banks of the river. The barking of the dogs drew from the crew of the beat a halloo, which was answered by the negroer. The beatmen made several inquiries about the neighborhood, and moved lowly off down the stream. The negroes folowed and watched, and after a while were surprised to see a small boat put off from the larger one. When this touched the bank two men were seen to land, taking a box with them, which they carried easily on their shoulders, but negroes. An bour later they returned to the boat minus the box, and after boarding the craft all sail was set, and she disappeared as mysteriusly as she came. It is understood that the mission of the detectives here is to discover the whereabouts of the box, but so far they have signally failed to do so. This information is only known to but a few people, among whom it has created quite a sensation.
